Rowan Brennan was determined to apply the well-known creed about a man's trash and a man's treasure to his own life. He'd watched his former best friend throw away what was more than likely the best thing that had ever happened to the both of them and ignoring it was now impossible. Simone Bruster's interest in navigating the raucous crowds, frat boys and adults attempting to regain their youth through too many shots on St. Patrick's Day is null and void. Rowan can't exactly blame her since last year's holiday brought her nothing but tears and green beer but this year--oh this year--he plans to bring her his kiss, his touch and a few things that don't have anything to do with Irish luck but basic masculine skill...
