A tiger shouldn't be picking tea-leaves and carrying luggage, but that's the only job Navarro sees in his future. He's learned to be humble since he and his friends, a wolf pack, exchanged their former careers as highway robbers for prison. Then Lady Jasprite Doughton, a merchant with all the grace of the far East and the wealth of the West, whirls through the village on the back of a dragon and reminds Navarro what it means to want something. With her dominating sexual tastes and her powerful personality, Jasprite challenges his body, his lust, his loyalty to his friends, and his own worth. After all, is gold enough to buy a tiger?
