Troubled by violence at home and abroad, American eleven-year-old Ashley Anderson begins a crusade for children's rights. But what begins as an ambitious plan for pacifist reform, a bid at being taken seriously, will degenerate into a dangerous and frightening game for survival: Compromise, betrayal, and some well-intentioned adults will twist her aims into a gun pointed at the very innocents she was trying to protect.

Somewhere between Judy Blume and Abbie Hoffman, between online safe-havens and child soldiers and terrorists, lies an Antarctica of loneliness: It's cold as hell there. Most of us are born into it. This is the story of one girl's mission to get us home again.
